Firemen Prove Worth

The Carmel Fire Department proved their worth last week by the manner in which they responded and handled the fire at Casanova and Eleventh street. Dr. Charles Peak's home is still standing only as the result of prompt and efficient action from our firemen.

The fire signal sounded at noon and the chemical apparatus and several auto loads of firemen and equipment were on their way less than two minutes later. That is a record for any organization to be proud of and proof to the people of Carmel that they have the nucleus of a fire department which deserves their support.

When the firemen arrived at the scene it looked as though there was little chance of saving the house from total destruction. The roof was enveloped in flames, which were reaching toward the pine trees and shrubbery surrounding, and only by the valiant work of the firemen were the flames extinguished in time to prevent their spreading to the surrounding property.

Several firefighters received minor injuries which could have easily have been more serious, and many members of the fire department returned home with ruined clothing, which will have to be replaced at their own expense. Should these men not have the support of every one in the community?

The Carmel Fire Department needs more active members at once. Every able bodied man in Carmel should be a member of the department. Wednesday, July 6, will be "Membership Night," and many new names will be added to the roster.

Sunday Show Protest

The following communication has been addressed to the Forest Theatre Society by a group of local people, who have raised an objection to the production of "Pomander Walk" on Sunday evening, July 2:

To the Forest Theatre Society—We, the undersigned, deplore the action of the Forest Theatre Society in planning to give a production of the play on Sunday. We wish to enter our protest against it, and request that the date may be abandoned or changed to a week-day.

Meeting Postponed

The special meeting of the City Trustees, which was called for Tuesday evening, was postponed, and the new developments which were expected in the Ocean Avenue controversy did not materialize. A strong representation of the victorious opponents of the present plan of improvement were present and there was marked evidence of disappointment at the failure of the Trustees to appear.

Warning

The City Marshal is authorized to arrest anyone who discharges fireworks of any kind within the limits of Carmel-by-the-Sea, except on the Ocean Beach. Parents should instruct their children accordingly.

Pine Needles

Miss Hazel Abbott of Los Angeles is visiting Mrs. Frances Clanton, who recently located here.

Mrs. J. J. Caddy, director of the Children's Theatre, San Francisco, is a week-end guest of Ann Dare.

The dates for the tenth annual California Rodeo and Salinas Big Week to be held in Salinas this year are July 27, 28, 29, 30 and 31.

Chester W. Rosecranz, director of the San Francisco Community Theatre, was a Carmel week-end visitor. He will spend July in Carmel.

Bertha Stringer Lee, one of California's successful artists, has joined the Carmel art colony for the month, and is finding daily inspiration for pictures for her winter exhibit.

Russell Stimmel, who is associated with Garnet Holme in the production of the Pilgrim play at Los Angeles, was a Carmel visitor last week, on his way south from Lake Tahoe.

Major and Mrs. J. R. Scupham of Oakland are sojourning here, and have as their guests their daughter, Mrs. B. J. Smith and children. Major Scupham has been for many years an active member of the California Academy of Sciences.

Two Carmel visitors last Saturday were baptised with fire and smoke. "Eddy" Healey and "Bill" Grace of the Columbia Park Boys, now in camp at Pacific Grove, greeted their friends at the scene of the Peake fire.

Miss Ruth Radcliff is leaving shortly for Pasadena, where she will attend the summer school of the Community Playhouse Association from June 27 to August 6. She will spend the balance of her vacation in Watsonville.

The Fuller family, who have spent the winter in Carmel, left for Los Angeles last Friday. George and Junior to enter Page Military Academy; Miss Jeanne in Los Angeles to take a few lessons in Russian dancing from Kosloff before leaving for Miss Sweet's Rocky Mountain Dancing Camp.

The Pine Cone is advised that the following vessels of the Pacific Fleet will arrive in Monterey next Monday and remain until Friday, July 1, Battleships New Mexico, Tennessee, Charleston; six destroyers, Mercy, Armstrong, Sub Chaser 306 and a number of air crafts. The ships will be open to visitors afternoons.

Miss Louise Mignon, County School Superintendent, and former Superintendent Schultzeberg visited the local school last week, spending an hour with the teachers and pupils. School will not close on the 24th, as announced, but on Wednesday, June 29th. This entire week is being devoted to examinations.

Mrs. Frances Clanton of Los Angeles and Mrs. J. B. Wilson, a San Francisco lady, are now residents of Carmel. It is their plan to open their home for lunches and afternoon tea, beginning tomorrow, in the vicinity of Arts and Crafts Hall, on Monte Verde street. Sunday service will be included.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Powers of Fresno have arrived for their annual Carmel summer.

Mrs. B. E. Summerville and her son, Ilbert, of Sebastapol, are occupying the Thudicup cottage during June.

Mrs. Vida L. Wingate and son, recently from New York, are residing here for the summer, and may remain beyond that time.

Carmel Martin, who was elected to the presidency of the Peninsula B. B. campaign committee, has notified the secretary that he cannot find time to serve.

Fred Wermuth, erstwhile stage driver between here and Monterey, was a visitor last week. He is now a resident of Petaluma, where he raises chickens.

Dr. Margaret Smyth of Stockton is registered at Pine Inn. Dr. Smyth is planning a building on the lots she has owned in North Carmel for many years.

Lawrence Edward Leidig, who arrived on this sphere about a fortnight ago, is growing big and husky. He'll soon be rooting for the Firemen's baseball team.

The delinquent tax list for Monterey county can be found at the Pine Cone office. This list contains over fifty names of Carmel residents. Better stop in and look it over.

Carmel has responded generously in money and clothing for the relief of the Pueblo flood sufferers. In addition to the general response, the local Red Cross telegraphed $100.

Mrs. Mark J. Lidstone and her daughter, Mrs. Herbert T. Maxwell, both of San Francisco, are occupying one of the Hogle cottages at Twelfth and Monte Verde, for the summer.

Prof. B. M. Duggar is again in Carmel. He has been in the East for about a year, while his family remained here. Dr. Duggar took a prominent part in the Dunsany plays here last August.

Plans are under way for the building of an addition to the Carnegie Laboratory in the very near future. The work will proceed under the direction of Dr. D. T. Macdougall and members of his staff.

The increasing number of automobiles on Ocean Avenue make it essential that traffic regulations be strictly enforced. Drivers should be cautioned to turn only at the end—not in the middle of the block.

Among Carmel visitors this week were H. D. Wilkinson and wife of Sacramento and Miss Eva Joy of San Jose. In the early months of the Pine Cone's life Mr. Wilkinson was employed in its mechanical department. He is now with the Sacramento Bee.

Carmel people are fortunate in having among their business enterprises such an excellent establishment as the Carmel Bakery. Visitors and residents regard the noteworthy sanitary methods employed therein as most excellent and up-to-date.

Carmel Wins Twice

Both Carmel teams in the Peninsula Baseball League were victorious in last Sunday's games. The Carpenters defeated Pacific Grove 5 to 0. Ray Ramsey scoring the shut-out.

The Firemen hammered out a 14 to 8 victory over the Minnieks, who were allowed only three hits by Alfred Rico, who pitched air-tight ball, and should have scored another no-run triumph.

Marshall Wermuth, who has featured with the stick in many previous games, was again the hitting hero of the firefighters and sent five runs across the plate. Carmel has hit her baseball stride at last.

The league standing follows:

Club	W	L	Pct.
Sticklers	7	1	.875
Columbus A. C.	5	3	.725
Carmel Carpenters	2	1	.666
Troop 1	6	3	.666
Minnie's	4	4	.500
Newsies	3	6	.333
Carmel Firemen	2	6	.250
Pacific Grove	2	6	.250

Carmel's Graduates

Twenty two graduation diplomas have been presented to the 1921 class of the Monterey Union High School. The names of the following Carmel students appear on this list: Elizabeth and Maryann Hopper, Jessie Askew, Hilda Hilliard, Andrew and Thomas Gillett and Franklin Murphy.

The Misses Hopper plan to enter the University of California this fall, and Miss Askew will take up kindergarten work at the San Jose Normal School. The Gillett brothers will enter Stanford University in another year, but will return with Franklin Murphy and Miss Hilliard to the Monterey High for a year of post-graduate work.

Married in Carmel

Last Monday morning at 10 o'clock, at the Burt cottage, Miss Ethel Wadsworth Burt was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur B. McKeen. Both are natives of Indiana.

The bride's home city is Pasadena, while the groom is a merchant in Los Angeles. Mrs. Frances Burt, mother of the bride, and Miss Sarah F. Nott of Oakland were witnesses to the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Fred Sheldon of the Carmel Church.

Wild Flowers in Danger

A. C. Pillsbury, wild flower expert, in a recent address to the State Librarians at Lake Tahoe, states that immediate and strenuous efforts are needed to save California's wild flowers from destruction. Mr. Pillsbury says that the California poppy is threatened with extinction through the raids of automobile parties who break off the blossoms to tie upon their machines, and because of similar depredations. Hundreds of other wild flowers are fast disappearing from the California slopes.

Mr. and Mrs. George J. Seidenack are enjoying a visit from the former's mother, who arrived recently from Chicago.

ART NOTES

Miss De Neale Morgan's class in sketching began its annual ten-week season last Monday with an enthusiastic group of artists eager to begin more work under the guidance of this gifted mistress of the brush. Miss Morgan is undoubtedly one of the best women artists on the Pacific Coast, her work being characterized not only for versatility of subject, but for its splendid quality of strength, vigor and innate appreciation of nature in all her moods. The distinction in composition which is so marked in her painting of Carmel subjects possesses simplicity and nobility, an effect which this artist has acquired by years of serious study and experience.

Her annual summer school of art has attained national fame, and pupils come from far and near to take advantage of this instruction.

There is to be an exhibition this week in Carmel Arts & Crafts Hall of the paintings of Ralph Davison Miller which will stir expectation among the local artists. Mr. Miller comes to Carmel from the south, where his pictures have excited much interest. Four very beautiful reproductions of his work appeared a short time ago in the Rotogravure section of the Los Angeles Times.

Pedro J. Lemos, director of the Museum and Galleries of Fine Arts at Stanford University, was a visitor in Carmel for the past fortnight, and is planning to build a studio early in the spring on his Casanova avenue lots in order to spend part of every year in Carmel.

Mr. Lemos, who is nationally recognized as an art educator, has been editor of the School Arts Magazine, an art teachers' publication, for the past twenty-one years; he is also author of "Applied Arts," "Arts Simplified," "Paint Methods," "Design Principles," and other texts used in art education.

In the June issue of his magazine, Mr. Lemos illustrates an article on outdoor sketching with over a dozen Carmel tree scenes, two of which are in color. The article pays glowing tribute to the artistic environment of Carmel, and the artists and writers who work here.

Those who were fortunate enough to see the Steiglitz exhibition of photographs at the Anderson gallery in New York, regard this artist's work the closest of modern photography to the epoch immediately after the discovery of this art—before photographers had become self-conscious. His photographs are carefully made from an untouched negative; he does not try to make his print look like an oil painting with the canvas showing through the paint. This interesting output covers a period extending over thirty-five years.

The University of Fine Arts had as their lecturer, last week, Penrhyn Stanlaws, New York illustrator, whose American beauties smile at one in all their loveliness. Stanlaws spoke on beauty, and the vagaries and canons of fashion and has been utilizing the broad casting medium of the films to teach American women his theories of art and dress.

The water-colors of Overton Colbert, the Indian artist, which were recently exhibited at the Montross galleries in New York, will do much to keep alive the wonderful art of the Indians and their folklore. Each of his pictures bore an explanation. "The Origin of Shooting Stars," a Chickasaw legend, was one of the most interesting: "When the Sun God Goes to Sleep," night appears, and the whole world is bathed in violet, blue violet and blue green stains cast from the hem of the rainbow's blanket. Belated hunters are lost and all the tepees wait in eagerness for the return of their hunters. The Great Spirit sends the star folk out, as their bodies give light, to help the hunters find their way. Some do their duty and shine brightly, but others are lazy and careless and do not shine brilliantly. The Great Spirit becomes maddened with their unkindness to their brothers, the hunters, and sends a dragon spirit which chases them and finally eats them—thus the chase across the heavens and the death of the stars. In the tepee, just where the smoke escapes, all see the twinkle of the star and then it goes out forever; Neshola screams with delight, the moon laughs and winks here eye as she sees all.

Max Kuehne is home from Spain with some fine pictures of hill towns and walled streets. A dozen of these paintings are at the Kraushaar galleries in New York, showing much red and yellow, landscape full of ardor of warm sunshine.

A varied and impressive collection of photographs, is the work of Francis Jay Mortimer, Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society and one of the best reputed photographers of Great Britain.

The collection which has been invited to Chicago, Pittsburg and California, represents photography in at least three phases—the record of British activity in the war and Royal academy paintings taken with the camera, and photographs of the sea. Better photographs of the sea in its impact on the shore, could not be asked—the beauty of the water, rolled and poured and swept through subtle curves of intricate beauty, and, except that it is captive—it is the sea.

Loren Barton is rapidly becoming one of the great etchers. Her work has been hailed by connoisseurs as of unusual merit. For some time past Miss Barton's paintings were very well known, especially in Los Angeles, where she has a studio. Only two years ago she entered the field of etching, where she has achieved such success. A few months ago she exhibited her work in New York and received most flattering notices from the critics. Miss Barton has recently completed a series of etchings of San Francisco, which will soon be placed on view.

Martilla Lane, whose exhibition at the Kunst Galleries is drawing much attention, loves best to paint the red woods. She paints these soaring, ageless trees with a sort of pagan rapture. She has caught the weight, the bulk, the height of the trees with an ease that is quite apparent and very pleasing.

Johannot-Waldvogel Summer School announces its opening Tuesday, July 5th, at 10 o'clock, at the Adobe El Galleron, Polk street, Monterey. Information concerning the class work may be had at the Adobe. Beginning July 13th, on Wednesday mornings from 10:30 to 11:30, for those interested in the work but not able to attend the entire course, there will be five special lectures upon the application of design and color to dress, interior decoration and decorative painting. Will those interested in the special lectures kindly register at the Adobe before July 5th.

CONSTRUCTIVE SPIRIT

Good citizenship does not consist solely in paying one's bills when due and conforming to statute laws. Each member of a community owes to the other members, individually and collectively, earnest support of worthy civic affairs. Such support should be actively given in a constructive spirit, with the welfare of the entire community in mind. All other arguments are fallacious and made from a selfish basis.

Honest differences of opinion often exist among citizens of communities not subject to "boss" rule. When they occur an effort toward community welfare by open debate will rapidly clear the atmosphere advantageously to all.

This is not a lecture on ethics. It is a statement of fact. A successful promoter of sporting events declares that "the only money in fighting is the gate money." This philosophy, applied to civic events, will prove to be most satisfactory as well as most profitable.

EVENTIDE AT CARMEL

A FRAGMENT

A golden pathway shed by the setting sun.

Narrowing and length'ning as it reached the shore

Through the dark headland found an open door,

Just as the day was done.

It flooded all the waves with shimmering light,

And where it kiss'd it painted them with gold—

On either side the sea was grey and cold,

Shrouded in coming night.

Oh! radiant pathway of the Golden Way;

Oh! opening of the Gates that lead to rest,

To golden eventide, we love thee best,

The close of Day.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Joseph Conrad's "Notes on Life and Letters" afford his admirers glimpses of his remarkable personality in various moods, analytical, admiring, at times indignant, but always interesting. In his preface he divides himself into four men, Conrad political, Conrad controversial, Conrad literary and Conrad reminiscent.

Conrad, it will be remembered, is a Pole and in his paper, "Poland Revisited," is more baffling than the vague book he chose to call "A Personal Record." The Reminiscence is not of a dimly remembered Poland, but of the sea and of England. He cannot recapture his boyhood, but he shows you instantly the London of today, the London of his youth and the voyage to the North Sea. "The same old thing," he says, "a gray-green expanse of smudgy waters grinning angrily at one with white foam-ridges and over all a cheerless, unglowing canopy—apparently made of wet blotting paper."

Conrad has written fifteen volumes, mostly about the sea, many pages necessarily about some aspect which he has treated more than once—he never repeats, has no pet phrases, but in each book is found astonishing new images as if he had never written before. The essays on books are unpretentious notes. Conrad's delight in Marryat and Cooper is not to be denied, but is quite understandable since these men are seamen and writers of the sea.

In Maupassant he finds cause for praise of the master's "austere fidelity to fact." Another of Conrad's masters, acknowledged in the phrase "twenty years of attentive acquaintance," is Henry James, for whom he has a generously envious admiration of his inconclusive style—the novel that stops but does not end because life has not end. Conrad winds his own stories up sharply, wipes out his people, annihilates them desolately. Or, where death does not conclude it, all but the character lives on, as in "The Rescue."

Of Anatole France, whom he terms the Prince of Prose, he says: "He is worthy of a great tradition, learned in the lessons of the past, concerned with the present and as earnest to the future as a good Prince should be in his public action. He is a great analyst of illusions."

Of Turgenyev, Doudet, Stephen Crane, he speaks, often with sympathy, always with insight and understanding. In the article briefly entitled "Books," he gives suggestions to the ambitious in these words:

"Liberty of imagination should be the most precious possession of a novelist. To try voluntarily to discover the fettering dogmas of some romantic, realistic or naturalistic creed in the free work of its own inspiration is a trick worthy of human perverseness."

"It must not be supposed that I claim for the artist in fiction the freedom of moral nihilism."

"It seems as if the discovery made by many men at various times that there is much evil in the world were a source of proud and unholy joy to some modern writers. That frame of mind is not the proper one in which to approach seriously the art of fiction."

"To be hopeful in an artistic sense it is not necessary to think the world is good—it is enough to believe that there is no impossibility of its being made so."

"The Long Way Round," by Emerson Gifford Taylor, is told in a rather complex manner, partly by the heroine in the first person and partly about her in the third person; an arrangement frequently leading to bewilderment and a certain confusion of impression.

Suzanne de Sevray, an artist, the daughter of a famous painter, has just about accomplished everything at the age of twenty-two and finds that, arriving at the summit of so many desirable things in youth, left the rest of life rather purposeless. She marries, for a change, goes to England, becomes widowed during the war, and decides to go to America to live in her mother's ancestral house in Northford.

Suzanne is overwhelmingly egotistical—she exhibits her pictures, wins the gold medal, and is about to become a conventional artistic lion when a former admirer of Paris days, a Roumanian youth, Bela Jedescu, arrives. Jedescu is a modern of moderns; Suzanne permits his influence to overcome her standard of morals, until she discovers him to be an impostor, and turns back to the faithful Nicholson.

There is much charm in the telling of this rather improbable tale, but the adventures of such a superwoman are not very near to the experience of the ordinary mortal.

MUSIC MATTERS

David Alberto, whom Carmelenos and visitors are to have the pleasure of hearing in recital tomorrow evening, has been a genius since a child.

A protege and pupil of Frank La Forge, he went to Vienna to study with Leschetizky, under whose tutelage he remained for three years.

Early in his career he conceived the desire to rank as a great interpreter of MacDowell, our American composer; "If I could rank as a 'MacDowell Player,' I should be content," he said years ago. 'Twas certainly a worthy ambition, for in MacDowell are combined all the exquisite tenderness and titanic strength of the contrasted moods of music. All this and more this gifted pianist has attained, and it will be with eager anticipation that lovers of good music await his coming to play in Carmel.

Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, is described as a borough of North Hampton and Lehigh counties on the north bank of the Lehigh river. The people of Bethlehem are not extraordinary, yet their love of Bach appears to be the supreme interest in the communal life of the town, and their annual Bach festival, which the Bach choir has been holding for the past sixteen years, with traditional solemnity and success, has recently taken place. Dr. Fred J. Wolle, the eminent musical director, is responsible for the Bach affairs. Being a keen student, he chose Bach who is so inexhaustible that the singers could never encompass his wisdom in a short time. Bach's music is really of the people and Bethlehem will always be identified as the place which gave us the Bach choir, the Moravian Trombone Choir and Dr. Wolle, "The Sages of Sheba" for tenor, The Ascension Oration and the great B-minor mass, which has been sung at every Bach festival, were heard.

Nicholas Douty, who has participated in each of the sixteen productions, Florence Hinkle, soprano, Merle Alexek and Mabel Beddoe, contraltos, sang well; experienced singers they are who know how to sing where dignity and severity of style prevail. There was no unique, artistic mark achieved, but the whole attainment, in which a part of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra took part, was a reflection of the scholarly qualities of Dr. Fred J. Wolle, our leading Bach disciple.

Edwin H. Lamare will leave for Honolulu in September and it is stated that upon his return from the Hawaiian trip, Mr. Lamare may go East to take charge of a large organ in one of the musical centers of New England, where the people are offering him a five years contract. Mr. Lamare will finish his term as official organist of San Francisco upon the first of July, after having served five years in that capacity. During this period, he gave nearly two hundred Sunday recitals in the Exposition Auditorium.

Phyllida Ashley, the gifted pianiste who was recently heard in recital at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco, has been visiting in Carmel. Speaking of her work a keen critic said:

"Miss Ashley's readings were most interesting; animated as they were by a poetic and quickening spirit. The Waldstein sonata revealed a sensitive sense of color and sympathetic insight into inner meanings. It was the work that tested most fully Miss Ashley's capabilities in interpretation and she was not found wanting in keenness of perception or warmth of feeling."

o o o

Estelle Heartt-Dreyfuss and Louis Ernest Dreyfus, who have taken a studio in Carmel for July and August, will be accompanied by several of their pupils who will continue their work during the summer. Before leaving Carmel Mrs. Dreyfus will give a musical for pupils and friends; Miss Edith Grimes, soprano, singing sixteenth and seventeenth century songs of Italy, Germany, France and England, and Miss Pauline Mathews Dainey, mezzo soprano, giving folk and modern songs of England.

Great interest has been aroused among musicians and music lovers of the bay district by the announcement that definite arrangements have been made with Charles Wakefield Cadman to appear in a recital of his own compositions at the Greek Theatre on the first evening of the music festival—September 15.

Mr. Cadman is one of the foremost American composers, and has devoted much time to the study and development of Indian themes in music and interpreting their aboriginal beauty with an unsurpassed understanding. "The Land of the Sky Blue Waters" has become universally known, and his Indian opera "Shanewis" is said to be the only opera by an American composer that has been produced for two successive seasons by the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company.

Mr. Cadman's many Carmel friends are delighted with his varied successes since his visit here several years ago.

Leo, Jan and Mischel Cherniavsky have landed in Montreal and are on their way to New York to resume their concert activities in America. The Cherniavsky trio which comprises these three talented brothers in their respective roles of violinist, pianist and cellist, has just finished another of its world tours after having played last season in the western and southern territory of the United States. From here they went to Australia, where they achieved remarkable success, then sailing for South Africa. They were enthusiastically acclaimed in that far-off country.

Carmel Tennis Stars

Carmel played an important part in the High School tennis championships which were played last Saturday between Monterey and Pacific Grove.

Franklin Murphy, Thomas and Andrew Gillett constitute the Carmel athletic trio which were responsible for keeping the Pierce and Towle trophy in competition.

Pacific Grove had already scored two consecutive wins for the cup and needed Saturday's victories to make their triumph permanent, but their defeat at the hands of the Monterey High racquetters cancel their hold on the trophy. Pacific Grove lost eight out of the eleven matches played.

Forest Productions

Attendance Assured

The advance sale of tickets for "Pomander Walk," which will open the Forest Theatre season on July 2, 3 and 4, has passed all previous records, and the out-of-town reservations are continuing to arrive with each mail. On the opening day of the ticket sale over one hundred seats were purchased at the Pine Cone office and many others placed in reservation. The rush for seats three weeks before the date set for the opening indicates that this will be a record year for Carmel's woodland show house.

The greatest demand for reservations from points outside of the Monterey Peninsula has been for the Sunday night performance, which will bring hundreds of motorists to Carmel from all sections of California.

Miss Katharine Cooke, who is producing the opening play, is well pleased with the progress and assures everyone that "Pomander Walk" will leave a pleasant memory in Carmel history.

Flowers are being arranged by many residents in this district for use on the stage, while the blossoms for Pomander lane will be donated by Humphrey Todd of Monterey.

Many names of children who are anxious to participate in "The Founding of the Witch" have been handed in at the Pine Cone office, but Arthur Cyril, who is handling the production of the children's play, announces that there is room for many more. High school students as well as pupils of the local school who are willing to take part in the play may do so by leaving their name, age and address at the Pine Cone office. Permission of parents will be necessary in all cases.

"Essays on Modern Dramatists," by William Lyon Phelps.

This book may be called a rhapsodical eulogy, judging from the profuse and indiscriminate distribution of superlatives which rates Professor Phelps as a most generous literary appraiser.

No one will take exception to his effervescence on the subject of Barrie, but he pays Barrie a poor compliment when he says the play version of "The Little Minister" was better than the book. In "The Admirable Crichton" he discovers "profundity" which is certainly one of the least suspected attributes of that admirable comedy.

The glowing estimate of the literary genius of Bernard Shaw, the distinguished essayist, critic and dramatist, will meet with general approval.

Of John Galsworthy he tells us that his experience as a traveler, making him a citizen of the world, partly accounts for the "extraordinary insularity of his subjects." "The Pigeon" is fully deserving of his eulogy, and "The Mob" and "Skin Game" are both worth more consideration than he thinks. His review of Clyde Fitch shows discrimination in the selection of his three best works, "The Girl with the Green Eyes," "Truth" and "The City."

Maeterlinck, he pronounces the "finest living writer in the world" and tells a curious anecdote of his transferring a scene from Browning's "Luria" to his own "Monna Vanna," as a token of great admiration.

Of Rostand he gives a really fine appreciation, which could have been tempered by a dash of cool, critical judgment.

The boys of the famous Perse Grammar School in Cambridge, which is well known for its original methods of teaching, has a dramatic society consisting entirely of school boys. These Perse boys acquire a real love for Shakespeare and the Elizabethan drama, and when their imagination and dramatic sense have been stimulated, they are encouraged to write plays of their own and to produce them on Shakespearean lines.

At a recent performance by the Perse Players, a comedy and a tragedy were produced. The comedy, called "The Duke and the Charcoal Burner," was an astonishing production, full of humor, with many exceedingly clever flashes of wit, and was written in excellent prose and verse by a boy of thirteen. The tragedy, dealing with the death of Roland, Charlemagne's knight, was in blank verse; its author, a boy of fifteen, showing an amazing appreciation of dramatic situations.

Both plays were acted on a double stage, arranged in true Shakespearean style with no scenery, the exits and entrances being through curtains arranged at the back and sides.

The comedy consisted of three scenes, and the tragedy of seven, and in each case the play went on continuously, the scenes being acted alternately on the inner and outer stage without a break.

The boys not only wrote and acted the plays; they made the stage properties and designed the stage costumes, which were very beautiful and historically accurate. The plays were produced under the direction of F. C. Happold, the English master.

"Chu Chin Chow" has broken the world's record for continuous performances. This piece has played at His Majesty's Theatre, for nearly five years, and has given over two thousand performances. It is not being taken off because of failure to attract, but because of the necessity of redecorating and remodeling the theatre. The house seats twelve hundred and forty people.

Isadora Duncan, the famous interpretive dancer, announces that on July 1st she is going to Russia. "To realize the one dream of my life—to have my own theatre, my own orchestra, and an audience that does not have to bargain for seats, and many pupils who will not have to pay money for education. Leonia Krassin has invited me to establish a national school in Russia. They may not have enough to eat there, but they are determined that art, education and music must be free. I am eager to see if there is one place in the world that does not worship commercialism above the mental and physical training of her children."

The Soviet Minister of Public Instruction it is said has made arrangements for Miss Duncan to take over the opera ballet for the instruction of children. It is her desire to train a great ballet troupe of one hundred, and tour Europe to show the results of her work.

An event that should interest teachers and social workers in the country and also those who are vicariously interested in the spread of aesthetic ideals in their community, is the second annual institute of The Drama League of America. One important subject will be a course on the technique of the little theatre, another will be the subject of pageantry, which will be exhaustively propounded. Other subjects will be drama for children, dancing and rhythm, puppets and pantomime.

Percy Mackaye's pageant and masque, "Sanctuary," is to be given in the Pine Mountain Park Stadium at Atascadero on July 4th, 5th and 6th. This pageant, which is one of Mackaye's most beautiful conceptions, deals with the subject of bird preservation. The characters of the pageant will be children costumed as birds. There will be incidental music by local composers, and in this beautiful natural pine-tree setting this production should be very fine. The Atascadero Chamber of Commerce has arranged to take care of visitors who may go there.

The seniors of the Salinas High School chose for their play the well-known comedy, "Come Out of the Kitchen," which will recall the clever acting of Ruth Chatterton as the little Southern girl, who, with the help of her two brothers and her sister rented their home and essayed the role of servants in order to help their father out of financial difficulties.

A rather ambitious project for high school players, but it is said they acquitted themselves quite creditably.
